Nato promises to

By Daniel Dombey in Washington

Anders Fogh Rasmussen, Nato's secretary-general, said yesterday he had no regrets about making the request for troops that preceded the Dutch government's collapse last week end, adding that the Dutch military should remain in Afghanistan.

While the Dutch political crisis has been seen as demonstrating the difficulty of committing more troops to Afghanistan, Mr Rasmussen insisted that the aftermath of his request for Dutch forces to stay in Uruzgan province had no such wider significance.

"I still think it makes sense to stay in Uruzgan,' he said in an interview with the Financial Times. "The Dutch soldiers are very popular in the area; they know the area; they know the people; they've done a great

He said he believed it had been "helpful" for him to send the Dutch government alternative scenarios in which some of their 1,600 troops in Uruzgan could have stayed after their mission expired in August.

While declining to specify which nation would fill the gap left by the Dutch, Mr Rasmussen said: "I can assure you that whatever happens there will be no vacuum. Possible shortfalls will be filled by Nato."

Far right hopes rise in

The Netherlands has called a snap general election for June 9 after the coalition government collapsed at the weekend over extending the country's military mission in Afghanistan, writes Michael Steen in Amsterdam.

The vote is likely to see a lurch to the right, with opinion polls predicting significant gains for the anti-immigration Party for Freedom (PVV) led by Geert Wilders (below). But fragmented voting intentions could make for

Vote-fixing fears for September election

By Matthew Green in Kabul

Western diplomats fear a decree signed by Hamid Karzai, Afghanistan's president, granting him control of an independent election watchdog will remove a bulwark against poll fraud.

The decree, seen by the Financial Times, gives Mr Karzai the power to appoint all five senior members of an Electoral Complaints Commission that threw out almost 1m fraudulent votes for him in August's flawed presidential polls, depriving him of a first-round victory A run-off was cancelle after Abdullah Abdullal his main rival, withdrew

The decree replaces legi lation designed to guara tee the ECC's independengiving the Nations envoy to Afgha stan the power to appoi three international staff its five-member board.

Grant Kippen, a Canadi who chaired the ECC d ing last year's election sis, warned that a broa process of consultation a reform was needed. "I decree will reduce co dence in the electoral p ess," Mr Kippen told FT. "Unless some ser
